THE RECALL.

BT MRS. HEMANS Alas! the kind, the playful, and the gay, They who have gladden'd their domestic board. And cheer'd the winter hearth, do they return for JOANNA BAILLE

Come home !- there is a sorrowing breath In music since ye went;
And the early flower-scents wander by
With mourtful memories blent:
The sounds of every household voice Are grown more sad and deep,
And the sweet word—Brother—wakes a wish

To turn saide and weep. O ye beloved, come home !- the hour Of many a greeting tone, The time of hearth light and of song

Returns—and ye are gone!
And darkly, heavily it falls On the forsaken room, surdening the heart with tenderness, That deepens midst the gloom.

Where finds it you, our wandering ones? With all your boyhood's glee Untamed beneath the desert's palm, Or on the lone mid-sea?
'Mid stormy hills of battles old,

Or where dark rivers foam ! Oh! Life is dim where ye are not-Back, ye beloved! come home! Come with the leaves and winds of spring. And swift birds o'er the main !

Bring us its youth again! Bring the glad tones to music back— Still, still your home is fair; The spirit of your sunny life Alone is wanting there !

Our love is grown too surrowful,

FROM THE PARIS OBSERVER.

LE DERNIER JOUR D'UN CONDAMNE. The Last Day of a Prisoner condemned to Death.) Par Victor Hugo. Troisieme edition. Paris, 1829. This is a small volume, by a writer who at this moment attracts much attention in Paris, Vic-ton Hugo; partly from the celebrity of the au-thor, partly from the claims of the piece itself, the work has run through three editions in less than so many months. It is conceived in a style new to French literature, but familiar to that of England. No Frenchman has ever come so near to nature in its agony; indeed, at any epoch be fore the present, it would have been deemed illbred to do so; and now there is an outcry against the author, for cruelly agitating the feel ngs of his readers. Hitherto such works have been forbidden the realms of taste, for the same reason that the spilling of blood was banished from the French stage-that undoubtedly the person who would take pleasure in frequenting executions must be grievously in want of excite ment; while the nerves are well strung, and the blood circulating in wholesome currents, no man is disposed to disturb the course of his well founded satisfaction by so severe a shock. It s only a morbid character who requires a galva nic application of this kind. In this morbid state, however, in certain countries and in certain states of civilization, are men found; and the analagous epoch in literature happens when wri-ters brood upon the horrible events of life, imagine themselves surrounded by them, exaggerate their proportions and deepen their colorof these pictures—when the world loves to have its feelings harrowed up, and judges its favorite authors by the measure of their power of agonize French are not yet arrived at int, but they are in full march towards it .-The immediate spring, however, of this last effort of M. Hugo (a writer whom, by the by, we have an extreme admiration for in his quality of poet) has been the perusal of the Memoirs of Vidocq. It is written in the vein of that person's remarkable prison scenes. Hugo, like Vidocq, has occasionally lighted up the darkness of his picture by the lurid flash of dungeon wit; his tone s frequently in that bitter and sarcastic vein o ocularity which speaks more plainly of deep suffering and utter despair, than the more direct expressions of anguish. But we will proceed to enable our readers to judge in part for them-" Bicetre.

" Condemned to death! "For five weeks have I dwelt alone with this dea; its presence has chilled me; it has bent me selves. It opens thus:- down under its weight. (He proceeds to compare his former state o mind with his present condition. After which he goes on.)

But now I am a prisoner: my body is in chains—in a dungeon. My soul is in the dungeon of an idea; a horrible, a bloody, an implaca ble idea; I have but one thought, one conviction, one certainty—Condemned to death!

Whatever I do, it is always there, this infernal thought, like a leaden spectre at my side, alone and jealous, driving off all distraction, and laying upon me its icy hand when I would turn away my head or shut my eyes. It slides in all forms into my mind, it is the burden of all I FOR SALE at the half price Book Store, No-8 South Front street, 3 doors below Market, at the hear, and mixing itself up with every speech addressed to me. It slips to the grating of my dungeon, it besieges me when awake, and when I sleep it watches my convulsive slumbers and re-appears in my dreams."

"It was a fine day in August.

" My trial had lasted three days-three days had my name and crime attracted a crowd of spectators, who settled down on the benches of the court like crows about a corpse-three days did all this phantasmagoria of judges, witnesses, lawyers, prosecutors, pass and re-pass before my eyes, one while grotesque, at another sanguina-ry, always dark and fatal. The two first nights I could not close my eyes from anxiety and af-fright; on the third I was overpowered with weariness and fatigue. At midnight I had left the jury deliberating. They brought me back to the straw in my dungeon, and I fell immedi-ately into a profound sleep—a sleep of oblivion. This was the first repose I had had for many

"I was still in the depth of this deep sleep when they came to awake me. This time I was not to be roused by the heavy step of the jailer, the tramping of his nailed shoes, the jingling of his bunch of keys, nor yet by the harsh jarring of the bolt; he was obliged to put his mouth to my ear, and his rough hand on my shoulder—'Get up, I say.' I opened my eyes, and sat upright in affright. At this moment I caught a sight of a patch of light on the roof of the adjoining gallery, the narrow slit in my dungeon wall: this was he only sky I was permitted to have a glimpse of, and well does the prisoner know how to recognize the sun by the yellow reflection of his rays .- 'Fine day,' said I to the turnkey. It was some time before he answered me, as if he were considering whether it was worth while; however, with an effort, he muttered surlily, 'very peated. 'Yes,' answered the man, 'they are waiting for you."

"These few words, like the string which checks the flight of the poor bird in the hands of a mischievous boy, brought me back to the reality with violence. All of a sudden I saw again, as in a flash of lightning, the gloomy as-size court before me, the horse-shoe bench, judg-es in their blood-colored garments, the three rows of witnesses with their stupid faces, the two gendarmes at each end of my bench: I fancied the black robes rustling about me, and the busy hive of heads below in the shade, and the fixed stare of the jurges upon my countenance, and who had watched while I had been sleeping.

"I got the sem teeth chattered, my hands trembled archicould not lay hold of my clothes; my legs were weak; at the first step I staggered like a porter under his burden too heavy for him. However, I followed the jailer.

"The two gendarmes were waiting for me at the door of my cell. They put on the bandcuffs -they were fastened by an intricate lock, which they closed with care. I let them do as they pleased, it was machine upon machine.

"We crossed the inner court. The fresh air of morning revived me. I raised my head: the sky was blue, and the warm rays of the sun, intercepted by the lofty chimnies, traced great angles of light upon the top of the high prison walls. We ascended a winding staircase; we traversed a gallery, then another, then a third: at last low door was opened. The warm air mingled with the hum, met me as I entered: it was the breath of the crowd in the hall of assize. I

"As I appeared there was a bustle, the jing-ling of arms and the sound of voices. The benches were noisily cleared, the doors clashed, and while I crossed the long court between the two masses of people, along an opening lined with soldiers, it seemed as if I was the centre to which was attached the thread that moved all these gaping countenances.

t until this instant did I perceive that I was without chains: I could not recollect either how or when they had taken them off. "There was a deep silence in the court. I had arrived at my place. When the tumult ceased in the crowd it ceased in my ideas—I clearly conceived that whilst hitherto I had only had a very confused glimpse of that, I had come there "Somehow or other the idea did not affect me

The windows were open; the air and noise of the town came in freely from without: the hall was as bright as if it had been for a wedding:-the cheerful beams of the sun were tracing here and here the luminous figures of the windows, one while lengthened on the floor, at another spread upon the table or broken upon the angle of the walls, and from each of the diamond shaped panes, there flowed a brilliant prism of the golden dust of the atmosphere

"The judges at the bottom of the hall had an air of satisfaction, probably from the pleasure of having nearly finished. The countenance of the president, faintly lighted up with the reflection from a pane of the window, had something in it very calm and benevolent; and a young assessor was talking almost gaily as he played with his band, with a fine woman placed by favor behind

"The jury alone appeared wan and depressed; eat up all night. Some of them gaped; nothing in their countenances indicated that they had prought in a sentence of death: I could divine nothing in the faces of these good citizens except a strong desire to sleep."

" Condemned to death! Well, why not? Men, remember to have read somewhere, men are all condemned to death, and reprieved from time to time. What then is so changed in my situa-

" From the hour when my sentence was pronounced, how many are dead who were prepar-ing for a long life: How many have preceded me who, young, free, and healthy, were reckoning upon such, or such a day on going to the Greve to see my head fall! How many are there, who now are walking at liberty, breathing the open air, and going in and out at pleasure, will still go before me.

deed of law." "Since the day did not yet appear, what was to do with the night? An idea has just occurred to me. I arose and carried my lamp round the four walls of my dungeon. They are covered with scrawls, rude drawings, droll figures, names one upon another. It would seem that each prisoner had wished to leave some trace behind him, here at least. Here is a pencil, chalk, charcoal, letters black, white, and gray, some lines deep cut in the stone, here and there ruddy characters, as if drawn in blood. Assuredly if my mind were less occupied I should take some interest in the strange history which opens upon me, page by page, as I go from stone to stone. On a level with my pillow there are two flaming hearts pierced with an arrow: above them the words 'Love for life.' The unhappy man did not engage for long. On one si sort of three cornered hat, with a very little figure coarsely drawn, and beneath these words

"Vive l'Empereur, 1824."
"Again flaming hearts, with this inscription characteristic of a prison, 'I love and I adore Matthew Danvin, James.' On the opposite wall is the name of Papavoine: the large P ornamented with all sorts of fine flourishes.

"The stanza of an obscene song. A cap of liberty deeply cut in the stone-with 'Bories' below. 'The Republic.' This was one of the subalterns who joined in the affair of La Rochelle. Poor young man! Oh, these political necessities are hideous; for an idea, a dream, an abstraction, this horrible reality called the guillotine .- And I, I pretend to complain! THE ORDINARY.

" No: low as I may be fallen, I am no unbeliever. God is my witness that I believe in him. But what is it that the old Ordinary has said to me? I felt nothing, I was not affected, I never wept; nothing laid hold of my soul; nothing came from his heart to mine—nothing which was his and then mine. On the contrary, all was vague, monotonous, applicable to all and "I sat still, half asleep, my eyes fixed upon the gilded patch of sun on the roof, my features relaxing into a smile:—'Here is a fine day,' I regical elegy. Here and there a Latin quotation:

St. Augustin, St. Gregory, or what not. And then he had the air of repeating a lesson for the twentieth time, of running over a theme obliterated from his memory by the mere force of familiarity. Not a glance in the eye, accent in the voice, or gesture in the hands. And how should it be otherwise? This priest is the official clergyman of the gaol. His business is to console and exhort, and he lives by so doing.—
The prisoners, the patients, are the wheels on which his eleganence runs. which his eloquence runs. He confesses them, and supports them, because it is his place to do so. For a long time he has been be bituated to that which would make another shudder: his well-powdered hair never stands erect: the galleys and the scaffold are every day circumstances for him. He is blunted. Perhaps he keeps a book, on one side the service for those who are to be transported, and on the other for those who are to be executed. He is informed in the evening who is to be consoled at such an hour; he asks whether he is to be transported or suffer death; and he reads the page, and then he comes.—Then both they who are going to Toulon, and they who go to the Greve, are but a common place for him, and thus he is but a com-

"Oh! let them go seek for me some young curate, or worthy vicar, as it may chance, in the first parish they arrive at: let them take him from the corner of his hearth, reading his book, and never expecting that he is about to be told -'There is a man who is going to die, and it is you who must console him-you must be there when they tie his hands behind, there when they cut off his hair-you must go with him in the cart, and hide the executioner from him with the cross—you must traverse with him the horrid and blood-thirsty crowd, embrace him at the foot of the scaffold, and remain till his head is here and his body there.' Then let them bring him to me, palpitating, shuddering from head to foot: let me throw myself into his arms, on his knees, and he will weep and I will weep; and he shall be eloquent, and I shall be consoled; my bursting heart will subside into his, and he will take my soul, and I will take his

"But this good old man, what is he to me? what am I to him?—an individual of an unhappy class, a shadow such as he has seen many, a unit to add to the number of his exertions.

"It is extraordinary that I am incessantly thinking of the King, I cannot help it; in vain I try to drive the idea away; there is always a voice whispering in my ear thus:—In this same town, at this very hour, and not far from here, in another palace, there is a man who also has his guards at all his doors, a man unique like thy-self among the people, with this difference, that he is as high as thou art low. His whole life, minute by minute, is nothing but glory, grandeur, delight, intoxicating. All about him is love, respect, veneration. The loudest voices whisper his presence, and the fiercest brow lays aside its terrors. Under his eyes there is nothing but silk and gold. At this hour he holds some council of ministers where all are of his opinion, or, perhaps, he dreams of the hunt to-morrow, of the ball this evening, sure that the fete will come at its hour, and that others will take upon themselves the labour of preparing its pleasures. thyself.—In order that at the very instant the scaffold should crumble under your feet, and that life, liberty, fortune and family should be restored to you, he only need write the seven letters of his name at the foot of a mersel of paper.

"The priest is good; the gaoler also. I think they each shed a tear when I told them my child had been taken away.

"It is done. Now I must brace myself against the event. I must think without flinching upon the executioner, of the cart, of the gendarmes, of the crowd on the bridge, on the quay, at th windows; and all this is on purpose for me, on the dismal place of the Greve, which might be paved with the heads it has witnessed fall.

"I think I have one hour to reconcile me to all that-"

M. Hugo professes that he has written his book with a motive—it is to appeal against the pun-ishment; he deems that if men would sympathize more nearly with their fellows, they would never put a living man in such a position. There is some force in the argument. We have only been able to pick out an insulated portion here and there; but we cannot help thinking that no one can read the whole without feeling that if he should ever have life within his power, his esponsibility would be awfully increased.

THE TIGER'S CAVE.

An adventure among the Mountains of Quito. [Translated from the Danish of Elmquist, and the German of Doring, by one of the Authors of the "Odd Volume," "Tales and Legends," &c.]

On leaving the Indian village, we continued o wind round Chimborasso's wide base; but its now-crowned head no longer shone above us in clear brilliancy, for a dense fog was gathering gradually around it. Our guides looked anxiously towards it, and announced their apprehensions of a violent storm. We soon found that their fears were well-founded. The fog rapidly covered and obscured the whole of the mo the atmosphere was suffocating, and yet so humid that the steel work of our watches was covered with rust, and the watches stopt. The river beside which we were travelling rushed down with still greater impetuosity; and from the clefts of the rocks which lay on the left of our path, were suddenly precipitated small rivalets, that bore the roots of trees, and innumera ble serpents, along with them. These rivulets often came down so suddenly and violently that we had great difficulty in preserving our for The thunder at length began to roll, and resounded through the mountainous passes with the most terrific grandeur. Then came the vivid lightning—flash following flash—above, around, beneath—every where a sea of fire. We sought a momentary shelter in a cleft of the rocks, whilst one of our guides hastened forward to seek a more secure asylum. In a short time he returned, and informed us that he had discovered a spacious cavern, which would afford us ufficient protection from the elements. We proceeded thither immediately, and, with great lifficulty, and not a little danger, at last got

The noise and raging of the storm continue with so much violence, that we could not hear the sound of our voices. I had placed myself near the entrance of the cave, and could observe, through the opening, which was straight and narrow, the singular scene without. The highest cedar trees were struck down, or bent like reeds; monkeys and parrots lay strewed upon the ground, killed by the falling branches; the water had collected in the path we had just passed, and hurried along it like a mountain stream. From every thing I saw, I thought it extremely probable that we should be obliged sible to continue our journey. The cave in which we had taken refuge was so extremely dark, that if we moved a few paces from the entrance, we could not see an inch before us; and we were debating as to the propriety of leaving it even before the Indians came back, when we seedent heard a singular groaning or growling at the further end of the cavern, which instantly find all our attentions. Wherton and myself intenses anxiously, but our daring and incomiderate young friend Lincoln, together with my hands man, crept about upon their hands and knowlead and endeavoured to discover, by groping, from whence the sound proceeded. They had not after the care the form to the care the first the firs vanced far into the cavern before we heard the utter an exclamation of surprise; and they retermed to us, each carrying in his arms an amount singularly marked, and about the size of a cet, seemingly of great strength and power and the nished with immense fangs. The eyes were of a green color; strong claws were upon their feet; and a blood-red tongue hung out of their mouths. Wharton had scarcely glanced at them, when he exclaimed, in consternation, "Good God! we have come into the den of a"—— He was interrupted by a fearful cry of dismay free our guides, who came rushing precipitately towards us, calling out, "A tiger! a tiger!" and at the same time, with extraordinary rapidity, they climbed up a cedar tree which stood at the antrance of the cave, and hid themselves among the branches.

After the first sensation of horror and surps which rendered me motionless for a moment, had subsided, I grasped my fire arms. Whatton had already regained his composure and solf-personion; and he called to us to assist him fastantly in blocking up the mouth of the cave with an immense stone which fortunately lay near it. The sense of approaching danger augmented our strength; for we now distinctly heard the growl of the ferocious animal, and we were lost beyond redemption if it reached the entrance' before we could get it closed. Ere this was does we could distinctly see the tiger bounding towards the spot, and stooping in order to creep into his den by the narrow opening. At this fearful moment our exertions were sad and the great stone kept the wild beast at bey. There was a small open space, however, isft between the top of the entrance and the stone; through which we could see the head of the animal, illuminated by its glowing eyes, which is rolled, glaring with fury, upon us. Its frightful roaring, too, penetrated to the depths of the cavern, and was answered by the hoarse growling of the cubs, which Lincoln and Frank had now tossed from them. Our ferocious enemy attempted first to remove the stone with his powerful claws, and then to push it with his head its place,—and these efforts proving abertive, served only to increase his wrath. He uttered a tremendous heart-piercing howl, and his flam-ing eyes darted light into the darkness of our

" Now is the time to fire at him," said When ton, with his usual calmness; " aim at his eyes; the ball will go through his brain, and we shall then have a chance to get rid of him."

Frank seized his double-barrelled gun, a Lincoln his pistols, the former placed the mus Lincoln his pistols, the former piaceurical within a few inches of the tiger, and Lincoln did the same. At Wharton's command they both drew the triggers at the same moment, but no shot followed. The tiger who seemed aware that the flash indicated an attack upon him, that the flash indicated an attack upon hims, sprang growling from the entrance; but, feeling himself unhurt, immediately turned back again, and stationed himself in his former place. The powder in both pieces was wet; they therefore proceeded to draw the useless loading, whilst Wharton and myself hastened to seek our powder-flask. It was so extremely dark, that we were obliged to grope about the cave; and, at last coming in contact with the cubs, we heard a rustling noise, as if they were playing with some metal substance, which we soon discoversome metal substance, which we soon discover-ed was the canister we were looking for. Most unfortunately, however, the animals had pushed off the lid with their claws, and the powder had been strewed over the damp earth, and renderbeen strewed over the damp earth, and render-ed entirely useless. This horrible discovery excited the greatest consternation. "All is now over," said Wharton, "We have only now to choose whether we shall die of hunger, together with these animals who are shut up along with us, or open the entrance to the blood-thirsty monster without, and so make a quicker end of the matter."

So saying, he placed himself close beside the stone, which, for the moment, defended us, and looked undauntedly upon the lightning eyes of the tiger. Lincoln raved and swore; and Frank took a piece of strong cord from his pocket, and hastened to the further end of the cave—I knew not with what design. We soon, however, beard a low, stifled groaning; and the tiger, who had heard it also, became more restless and disturbed than ever! He went backwards and disturbed than ever! He went save in the forwards before the entrance of the cave in the forwards before the entrance of the cave in the most wild and impetuous manner, then steed still, and stretching out his neck in the direction of the forest, broke forth into a deafening howl. Our two Indian guides took advantage of this opportunity to discharge several arrows from the tree. He was struck more than once, but the light weapons bounded back harmless from his thick skin. At length, however, one of them struck him near the eye, and the arrow remained sticking in the wound. He now broke anew into the wildest fury, sprang at the tree, and tore it with his claws, as if he would have dragged it to the ground. But having at length succeeded in getting rid of the arrow, he became more calm, and laid himself down as before in front of the cave.

Frank now returned from the lower end of the den, and a glance showed us what he had been doing. In each hand, and dangling from the end of a string, were the two cuba. He had strangled them; and before we were aware what he intended, he threw them through the owning to the tiger. No sooner did the annual perceive them than he gazad carneals. perceive them than he gazed earnestly up them, and began to examine them closely, tu-ing them cautiously from side to side. As see as he became aware that they were dead, he uttered so piercing a howl of sorrow, that we were obliged to put our hands to our ears. When I upbraided my huntsman for the cruel action he had so rashly committed. I perceived by him blunt and abrupt answers that he also had jost. all hope of rescue from our impending fate, and that under these circumstances, the ties between master and servant were discussions. master and servant were dissolved. For my own part, without knowing why, I could not help believing that some unexpected assistance would yet rescue us from so horrible a fate. Alas! I little anticipated the sacrifice that my how all nature was reviving after the wild war of elements which had so recently taken place; but the contrast only made our mination the more horrible. We were in a grave from which there was no deliverance; and a mounter, worse than the fabled Cerberus, kept watch over us. The tiger had laid himself down beside his whelpst. He was a heautiful animal, of great cine and strength, and his limbs being stretched out at their full length, displayed his immense power of muscle. A double row of great teeth mode for enough apart to show his large red tongue; from which the white foam fell in large drops. All at once another roar was heard at a All at once another roar was heard at stance, and the tiger immediately rose and sewered it with a mournful howl. At the same stant, our Indians uttered a shrick, which aned that some new danger threatened us. moments confirmed our worst fears, for tiger, not quite so large as the former, dly towards the spot where we were. "This enemy will prove more cruel than the other," said Wharton; "for this is the female, and she knows no pity for those who deprive her

The howls which the tigress gave, when she examined the bodies of her cubs, surpassed thing of horrible that we had yet heard: ever thing of horrible that we had yet heard; and the tiger mingled his mournful eries with her's. Suddenly her roaring was lowered to a are growling, and we saw her anxiously otch out her head, extend her wide and oking nostrils, and look as if she were deto discover immediately the murderers of her young. Her eyes quickly fell upon us, and she made a spring forward with the intention of penetrating to our place of refuge. Perhaps also might have been enabled, by her e strength, to push away the stone, ot, with all our united power, held it her. When she found that all her efwere fruitless, she approached the tiger, lay stretched beside his cubs, and he rose oined in her hollow roarings. We now began to entertain better "Do not flatter yourselves," said he, th the belief that these animals will let us cape out of their sight till they have had their mge. The hours we have to live are numevertheless, there still appeared a chance our rescue, for, to our surprise, we saw both Indians standing before the entrance, and d them call to us to seize the only possiof our yet saving ourselves by instant for that the tigers had only gone round the to seek another inlet to the cave, with ch they were nod oubt acquainted. In the est haste the stone was pushed aside, and stept forth from what we had consider ing grave. Wharton was the last who left was unwilling to lose his double-barrelled gun, and stopped to take it up: the rest of us only of making our escape. We now heard once more the roaring of the tigers, though at a distance; and following the example ur guides, we precipitately struck into a path. From the number of roots and these of trees with which the storm had strewed our way, and the slipperiness of the road, our flight was slow and difficult. Wharton, an active seaman, had a heavy step though an active seaman, had a heavy step, and had great difficulty in keeping pace with us, and we were often obliged to slacken our own on had proceeded thus for about a quarter bour, when we found that our way led the edge of a rocky cliff, with innumer-seures. We had just entered upon it, when ne of their piercing shricks, and we immediately became aware that the tigers were in pursuit of us. Urged by despair, we rushed over which was thrown a bridge of reeds, that rang up and down at every step, and could trod with safety by the light foot of the Indians alone. Deep in the hollow below rushed an impetuous stream, and a thousand sand pointed and jagged rocks threatened destruction on y side. Lincoln, my huntaman, and myself, ed over the chasm in safety; but Wharton was still in the middle of the waving bridge, and endeavouring to study himself, when both the tigars were seen to issue from the adjourning rest; and the moment they described us, the ided towards us with dreadful roaring. Meanwhile, Wharton had nearly gained the safe side of the gulf, and we were all clambering up the rocky cliff except Lincoln, who reto step upon firm ground. Wharton, though s animals were close upon him, never lost his courage or presence of mind. As soon as he had gained the edge of the cliff, he knelt down, and with his sword divided the fastenings by which the bridge was attached to the bridge was attached the bridge was attached the bridge was attached to the bridge was att be put to the farther progress of our pursuers; he was mistaken; for he had scarcely accomplished his task, when the tigress, without ent's pause, rushed towards the chasm, and inted to bound over it. It was a fearful sight to see the mighty animals suspended for a moment, in the air, above the abyss; but the one passed like a flash of lightning. Her strength was not equal to the distance: she fell into the gulf, and before she reached the bottom, she was torn into a thousand pieces by the jagged points of the rocks. Her fate did not in the least dismay her companion; he followed her with an immense spring, and reached the opposite side, but only with his fore claws; and thus he clung to the edge of the precipiec, endeavouring to gain a footing. The Indians again uttered a wild shrick, as if all hope had lost. But Wharton, who was nearest the edge of the rock, advanced courageously tothe tiger, and struck his sword into the animal's breast. Enraged beyond all measure, the wild beast collected all his strength, and with a violent effort, fixing one of his hind legs upon the edge of the cliff, he seized Wharton the thigh. That heroic man still reserved fortitude; he grasped the trunk of a tree with his left hand, to steady and support himwill, while with his right no wienesses, the work of breast of the tiger. All this was the work of an instant. The Indians, Frank, and myself, hastened to his assistance; butt Lincoln, who was already at his side, had seized Wharton's gun, which lay near upon the ground, and struck so powerful a blow with the but end upon the head of the tiger, that the animal, stunned and overpowered, let go his hold, and fell back into abyss. All would have been well had it ended thus; but the unfortunate Lincoln had not calculated upon the force of his blow; he stappered forward, recled upon the edge of the precipiec, extended his hand to seize upon any thing to save himself—but in vain. His foot alipped: for an instant he hovered over the gulf, and then was plunged into it, to rise no more!

ANOTHER MORGAN TRIAL. We lose not a moment in laying before ou readers the following interesting account of the sentencing of Eli Bruce, one of the abductors of William Morgan, and also of the trial of two others charged as conspirators, and the conviction and sentencing of one of them. Mr. Spea-cer has taken hold of this dark and dreadful affair with an evident determination to probe the matter to the bottom. What is said of the character and disposition of Bruce, by Judge Howell is no doubt correct, and we are fully persuaded that on the subsequent trial of Smith and Gilles, Bruce gave a plain and unvarnished statement ledge of, or participation in, the foul transaction. We hope Mr. Spencer will proceed in the good work natifall concerned shall have been brought

THE MORGAN CONSPIRACY .- The proceed ings in relation to this subject at the Court of general sessions of the peace, which was held in this village during the last week, were of the time to prepare a full and elaborate statement, but shall do so, and publish it in the next Mes senger, unless we find one in some of the neigh bouring papers. In the mean time, the follow-ing abstract of the principal events will, in some measure, satisfy the intense curiosity of the

On Tuesday morning, the 19th inst. Mr. Whiting, the District Attorney, and Mr. Spencer, the Special Commissioner, produced the opinion of the Supreme Court, upon the case which had been reserved for their advice, on the trial of Eli Bruce, in which the objections to the juris-diction of the general sessions of Ontario were overruled, and that Court was advised to render adgment against the defendant. At the instance of one of the counsels for the defendant, he motion for judgment was suspended. On Wednesday morning the motion was made .-The special commissioner stated to the court his desire to produce a witness in aggravation of the punishment of Bruce; and called

Hiram B. Hopkins, who being sworn, testi-fied that, in September, 1826, Eli Bruce was Sheriff of the county of Ningara, and that the witness was his deputy. They both resided in the jail at Lockport. Some two or three weeks before the abduction of Morgan, he was informed by Bruce and others, that it was in contemplation to remove Morgan from Batavia, where he then was, directly across the country, to Lewiston, to carry him to Fort Niagara, and ultimately to put him on board a British man of war. On one particular night, six or eight days before Morgan was earried from Batavia to Canandaigua, Bruce called the witness up from his bed, and told him that he expected Morgan immediately, and that witness must prepare a cell in the jail for his reception. A cell was pointed out for that purpose, which was the most secret and retired in the iail, and which did not communicate with any other. The witness prepared this cell accordingly; but Morgan did

The witness was at the installation of the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Lewiston on the 13th of September, and was then informed that Morgan had arrived and was confined in Fort Niagara; this was generally known among the masons assembled there.

In answer to cross-interrogatories by the counsel for the defendant, he stated that he had not disclosed the facts to which he now testified unil recently, when he had communicated them to Mr. Spencer at Lockport. That he had con-sidered himself bound by his masonic obligations not to disclose them, until his own reflections had satisfied him that he had no right to with hold them. That he had been unhappy ever since the occurrence, and found no peace of mind until he had revealed it. The counsel for Bruce then requested som

to enable them to meet and explain the testimony thus given; to which request the court acceded. No testimony of any kind, however, was produced on their part, in explanation, or in reation to the subject or the witness, except what Eli Bruce himself swore as a wirness on the tria of John Whitney and James Gillis, by whom he was produced, and which testimony is hereafter particularly detailed. On Saturday night, after he trial of Whitney and Gillis was concluded the court proceeded to pass judgment on Eli Bruce. We should do in justice to our own feelings, and to the universal sentiment of a crowditory, if we failed to characterise th marks of Judge Howell, preceding the sentence. as one of the happest specimens of dignified ju-dicial eloquence, ever heard within the walls of our court house. He felt and spoke as a man, sympathising with the sufferings of a fellow-be ng, whose character in life had hitherto bee most respectable, who had filled a most respon sible office, and who had a wife and helples family to share his misfortunes and his disgrace. His former character and the information deriv ed from his neighbours, he said, induced the he lief that Bruce was not a depraved man, but one who would revolt from the commission of what he deemed any offence against the laws. His conduct was to be accounted for, only, on the ground, that he supposed himself bound by the obligations he had entered into, with the masonic fraternity, to commit the outrage he had perpetrated. Nothing, said the Judge, could be more fallacious; no principle could be more dan-gerous in any community having an organized No set of men, be their number large or small, had a right to combine themselves together in any association, for purposes hostile to the provisions of law. No man had a right to withdraw his allegiance from his country and its government while he lived under its protection; no citizen could by any act of his enter into any obligation to do any act forbidden by the law. His obligations to obey the laws of his country, were paramount to all others which he could possibly form. The outrage upon the person of William Morgan, had shown that there was a lamentable and most dangerous delusion on this subject: and it became the solemn duty of courts of justice to dispel it, and to teach all men, and particularly those who indulged this fatal error, that the law was over them, and that they must submit to it. That for this reason, and having this object in view, the court were bound to make him, Bruce, an awful example of the consequences of acting upon the principle upon which he and his associates had perpetrated the offence of which he had been nvicted. They were further called to the discharge of this painful duty, by a consideration of the official station which Bruce held at the very moment, and of his having perverted that staion to purposes, which it was his special duty After a most powerful appeal to the feelings of Bruce, which melted the hearts of all who heard it, the Judge announced the sentence of the court to be, that "You, Eli Bruce, be confined in close and recure custody, in the common jail of the county of Ontario, for the term of two years and four months."

We have not pretended to give the chaste and dignified language of Judge Howell nor to give more than a portion of his sentiments; and we are certain that we have not expressed them with the point and precision with which they were delivered. We hope the whole sentence may be obtained for publication; as we firmly believe i calculated to make a deep impression on those misguided men who are still infatuated with the preposterous idea that they can form any associations by which they can be absolved from their obligations to the laws of their country.

On Wednesday morning, the second day of the sitting of the court, Mr. Spencer, the spe-cial Commissioner, moved the court that they should immediately proceed to the trial of John Whitney. Gen. Mathews, one of the counsel for the defendant, urged a delay on the ground that his associate counsel, Mr. Griffin, was absent in pursuit of an important witness, and was expected to arrive in the course of the day. Mr. pencer contended that this was no reason for delay, that there were sheriffs and constable enough, &c. The court, however, agreed to wait until afternoon, upon the assurance that an important witness for the defendant was then expected. In the mean while, a civil cause was brought on for trial, which occupied the court the whole of that day. On Thursday morning Mr. Spencer renewed his motion for an immediate trial of John Whitney and James Gillis. An affidavit was now produced on the part of Gillis, of the truth, so far as it relates to the original of the materiality of a witness, who had been object of the conspirators in taking Morgan to subpænaed the day before, and who was absent, and further delay was solicited. The special commissioner immediately sent for the absent in court by two o'clock, at which time it was arranged the trial should commence, if the witness arrived. Another civil cause intervened, and it was not until about three o'clock, i the afternoon of the 21st inst. that the drawing of the Jury commenced. Whitney was present, but Gillis was absent. A mass of testimony was introduced on the part of the people, which ocsupied the court and jury the residue of the day, and until the evening of the next day, the 22d On the morning of the 23d, the testimony on the part of the defendants was commenced, and con-

nued until dinner time. Among the witnesses produced by the defen-dants, was Eli Bruce, who testified, that on the evening of the 13th of September, 1826, he was first apprised that William Morgan was coming on from Canandaigus, on the ridge road. He was told this, by Burrage Smith and another person then living at Lockport. Some six or eight days previous to this, he had been informed by a gentleman from Batavia, that Morgan was willing to go away from Miller, and the witness was requested to assist in his removal, which he declined. He, however, had been requested by another person to prepare a cell for Morgan in the jail at Lockport, in contemplation of Morgan's being carried directly across from Batavia Lockport, and thence to Niagara. Smith and the person who came with him, told witness that Morgan had come voluntarily, and was willing to go into Canada; they said he had come peaceably, and wanted witness to assist in getting him on. Witness declined at first, but finally agreed to do so, and between 9 and 10 o'clock went to the house of Solomon C. Wright, living on the tidge road, three miles north of Lockport, where he found the carriage, and got into it. William Morgan, or a person called Morgan, was in it, one Hague, who is now dead, meelf, and no others were in the carriage. It was driven by a person of his acquaintance.— There were several persons at Wright's who did ot belong to the house; and on his way there, he met some strangers on foot geing towards Lockport. He never saw Lawson, until he saw him here in jail. He did not see Whitney, and did not know him. He afterwards stated that he saw Whitney at the installation at Lewiston.

He went in the carriage from Wright's to Lewiston, where another carriage and horses were procured; the same passengers got into Fort. On their way, they took in another passenger. The testimony of Corydon Fox is perfectly correct. Witness did not see Morgan until their arrival at Lewiston, when they came to the ferry and got out of the carriage.

Morgan locked arms with the two who accompanied witness. Morgan was blindfolded in the carriage, which was kept perfectly closed, the curtains down, the windows up, &c.

Witness and his companions, four besides himself, crossed the river, to Canady, having Morgan in the boat. Their object was to get Morgan away from Miller, into the interior of the country in Canady, and place him on a farm. The expected arrangements for the ecception of Morgan in Canada, had not been made, and it was thought best to wait a few days .- Morgan was accordingly brought over to this side the river, and was put into the magazine in Fort Niagara, to await the preparations on the other side to receive him. It was past midnight and before daylight when they put magazine. He has never seen Morgan from that day to this; and has never had any commu-nications from any person respecting what was

While with Morgan in the carriage, the conersation among them was, that he, Morgan, was going among their was, that he, Morgan, was going among his friends: he appeared to be easy and said nothing. At Lewiston witness took a sulky and horse that were there, and drove them to Los port; they were to be know where. Did not learn at Lewiston that Burrage Smith came on in a sulky; understood the lorse he drove was owned on the ridge some

When the carriage with Morgan drove up to Molyneaux's, another person rode up on horse back. He did not stop there. Witness doe not know what became of him. He says that he supposed Morgan went voluntarily; Morgan had a handkerchief over his eyes, and had hat on. Witness was informed, and supposed, that the object of putting a handkerchief eyes, was that he should not discover those who rode with him. On being again interrogated, whether upon the oath he had taken, he still persisted in declaring his belief that Morgan went voluntarily, he said, he did.

We have given this testimony of Eli Bruce from the notes of one of the counsel who ex-amined him, and have no doubt of its substantial accuracy. We publish it now, because it establishes for the first time by testimony in a court of justice, the horrible fact that Morgan was confined in a magazine. There was no doubt of that fact before; but it is now absolutely proved by one of the conspirators, and henceorth all doubt on that point must cease. It is mpossible for us now to state the other testimony adduced on the trial. On Saturday the 24th at about two o'clock the counsel for the defendants commenced summing up. General Mathews addressed some remarks to the court on legal questions, to which Mr. Spencer briefly replied. Mr. Griffin then addressed the jury, in behalf of the defendants, in a speech of about two hours. He was followed by General Marvin on the same side, who occupied four hours and a quarter, and closed after 8 o'clock in the evening. Mr. Spencer then replied in behalf of the people, and occupied about two hours. Judge Howell then briefly charged the jury, informing them that any verdict to be valid must be rendered by 12 o'clock, but at the same time cautioned them not to be hurried in their deliberations, and if they found they had not time to deliberate maturely, to come court at 12 o'clock, and they would be discharged. A quarter before 12 the jury came in an stated that they had agreed as to one defendant but not as to the other. The public prosecutors urged the court to receive the verdict on the ground that these defendants were severally charged, and the jury might acquit one and convict the other. Some doubt being expressed, it was finally agreed by Whitney and hi counsel on the one hand, and the public prosecutors on the other, that the verdict should be rendered. No consent was given on the part of Gillis. The jury then rendered a verdict of guilty against Whitney, and stated that they had not agreed as to Gillis. The court inquired whether there was any probability of their agreeing soon? To which they answered in the negative, and it being now very nearly 12 o'clock he jury were discharged.

The court then sentenced John Whitney to imprisonment in the county jail for one year and

Thus terminated one of the most arduous and interesting trials ever had in this part of the country .- Thirty-one witnesses were examined on the part of the people, and thirteen for the defendants. The order in which the witnesses were called and the manner in which they were examined, indicated the extensive and laborious preparation which had been made. It was one of the most arduous trials we ever witnessed; every inch of ground was disputed, and the counsel engaged lost nothing of their reputation for ability, by their efforts on this occasion. It would seem that the officers prosecuting for the government are determined to pursue this unfortunate business in all its ramifications and branches, for the purpose of vindicating the su-premacy of the law, and convincing our fellow-citizens that no private and voluntary obligations, no secret or other associations can possibly release them from the great and param duty which they owe the country that protects | ty, imitate your example, of admitting deputies them by its strength. We learn that indict ments were found by the Grand Jury for perjury, alleged to have been committed on some of former trials for the Morgan conspiracy, and also for enticing witnesses to absent themselves and keep away from court. We deeply lament the fact, while at the same time we are thoroughly persuaded of the absolute necessity of

PHILADELPHIA:

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 29, 1829.

The following sums have been borrowed n this city, by the State, for the CANAL FUND:-From the Bank of Pennsylvania, $100,000; Stephen Girard, $100,000; the Commercial Bank, $70,000; the Philadelphia Bank, $50,000; the Mechanics' Bank,

A MARKET STREET MERCHANT, in redying to an indiscreet communication in a very respectable morning paper, has done what we should otherwise have felt bound to take upon ourselves. We have had sufficient opportunities of knowing that the statements of our correspondent are correct n every point; particularly that the trade in question was never in the hands of persons nore respectable, or more acceptable generally to the merchants of the interior, than those of the present day. The amount, and the nature of the business lately done are sufficient proofs of this; and more direct testimony would not be wanting, if neces-

The rapid growth of the town of BUFFA to. in NEW-YORK, is noticed by a correspondent of the REPUBLICAN, in these terms:-I never witnessed a more beautiful sight than presented itself to the eye, at our harbour, on Sunday last. There were about 30 vessels of all the various sizes, spreading their canvass in the sun, and dressed in flags. In apprising you that I am an old settler, you will readily believe me amazed at the gay scene. I was so. Contrasting it with the situation of Buffalo Creek in 1811, when not a building graced its banks, where those which now line it are located, and when I was enabled in June to wade Buffalo Creek the comparison is great and wonderful. It is estimated that the town below the high bank contains about 1500 inhabitants: to this add the floating population, and the average will be over 2000 persons." But amidst all these improvements, the vriter sighs for the establishment of treadmills and a police office; not without cause, if the following picture is to be taken with no more than usual caution:-" Something should be done early to arrest the moral evils which this prosperity is implanting. During the relaxation from labor on the sabbath. hundreds are seen strolling about the docks, and filling the canal bridges. To them add the hosts of emigrants devoured by ennui, and sauntering around, waiting the sailing of the craft; and there can be added to the whole, some scores of clerks, apprentices and vagrant sons. All these congregate about the bridges, docks, and victualling stands, and spend the greater part of the sabbath in idleness, vicious practises, and downright dissipation; and if they do not fill up the measure of nonsense, debauchery and crime, by wearing out half the night, they would illy act out the character they voluntarily put on."

A letter from PARIS, published in a late Lonpon paper, thus describes the manner in which the election of DEPUTIES is conducted in FRANCE:-" We have no hustings, no processions, and no expenses ruinous to the candidates. Our elections are peaceable. They take place on the points marked out by the president. The Electorial Assembly appoints four scrutators and secretary; an election may be finished in a day. The urn for receiving the votes is open from 8 in the morning till 3 in the afternoon .-Every elector votes secretly, by delivering to the president a sealed billet, which contains his vote. To render the election valid, the Electorial Assembly must consist of at least two-thirds of the electors inscribed on the list, and the candidate to be elected must have an absolute majority of the expressed suffrages. The secrecy of the vote is rigorously required; and nothing more revolted the public against the last administration than the indecent manner in which the violation of this rule was encouraged. The candidates, doubtless, endeavour to gain the good graces of the electors, but a failure would be certain were noney to be distributed among them. We have no electors who do not pay at least 300 francs of taxes, which indicates a certain degree of easy circumstances. The only expenses consists n some dinners, given and received, and in the hire of carriages to bring up distant or tardy electors. You may easily conceive that, during the elections, the Government authorities exert themselves to favour the views of the ministry, and that, consequently, they are ready to incur some extraordinary expenses, but there is nothing with us at all resembling what passes at your elections. There certainly is at your elections an appearance of liberty and popular control, which cannot be seen in the same degree at ours; but, in consequence of the last precautions which have been adopted here, we, perhaps, may assert that we possess more real liberty in our elections. You are aware that our deputies are elected for 7 years; that an elector cannot vote until he is 30, and that a candidate must be 40 to entitle him to be returned. This appears to me very absurd, and I think it would be proper to reduce the age of the former to 25, and of the latter to 30. We could not, with proprie-

to the Chamber at 21. There is too much petu- | it, that I will leave the greater and more giganlance and rashness in the character of French tic part of it in your hands. - I am your obedies youth to admit of such an experiment. The umber of our electors, which in 1820, was 102, 000, is now only 88,000, in consequence of an alteration in the land tax. The number eligible for deputies was then 22,000, and is now only 16,000, in a nation containing 32,000,000 of inhabitants. From this you may estimate the good faith of those who ery out against the encroachments of democracy, and affect to be afraid of the influence of the 16,000 richest landholders in the country.

On the mode of decision with respect to contested elections, the writer says:-" Your inquiry on this subject could not have been made more opportunely, for yearerday the Chamber was occupied with the consideration of this very question. If a citizen, claiming the right of roting, finds himself erroneously described in the ist drawn up by the prefect, he may proceed in support of his claim before that magistrate by a petition, which is tried in the Council of the Prefecture; and if there arise any dispute as to lomicile, or the rating of the taxes, the claimant mov appeal to the Royal Court, which gives udgment in the last resort. This interference of the Royal Courts in determining administrative questions appears singular under some points of view, but it affords a powerful guarantee for the public. Third parties, that is to say, other electors than he who is directly interested in the question, may prosecute the person who has procured an illegal inscription. The process is then carried on between the third party complaining, before the administration of the prefecture, and on the appeal before the Royal Courts. All the keepers of civil registers, and of lists of taxes, are held bound to allow the electors to examine these documents, and to deliver extracts from them when required. These wise and patriotic precautions are due to the law of the 2d of July, 1828, and to the present Ministry. When an eligible candidate is chosen Deputy, the validity of his return is decided on by the Chamber, which is divided into nine bureaus, or sections, formed by lot. The bureau to which the returned candidate belongs examines his election, and a report of that examination is made to the Chamber in a public sitting. Last year, M. Chardonnet, who had been elected for the department of the Seine and Loire, was excluded on account of irregularity as to his ualifications. Next day he stated that fresh ocuments, which he had received, might possibly induce the Chamber to come to a different decision. The Chamber, however, persisted in the exclusion, on the ground of the respect which ought to be paid to a final jndgment. Two days ago the Chamber solemnly confirmed this principle of its jurisprudence. M. de Bully, deputy for the department of the North, had evidently obtained his seat under favour of foreign qualifications, and by an illegal rate of the taxes he paid. He was returned last year to the Chamber. This year he became the object of vehement attacks on the part of his constituents. To the documents already produced against him, others were joined, which proved fraudulent fabrications on the part of the public authorities who had aided his election. After a very animated debate, the Chamber, pevertheless, decided almost unanimously, that the right of sitting could not now be questioned, but at the same to the Keeper of the Seals, that he might prosecute and punish the guilty. The ground of this decision is dictated by political considerations of high importance. It is thought that a precedent ought not to be established which might, some time or other, commit the rights of deputies to the caprice of a violent majority, and that there would be serious inconvenience if the seats of deputies might be every year be questioned. M. de Bully would, however, have done better, had he prevented these painful and humiliating debates by resigning."

The annexed letter has accidentally caught our notice; and we think it would be a pity not to preserve it, as a literary curiosity, and a specimen of the style of a class of functionaries who seldom, with us, favour the public with other than oral effu-

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,-In the progress of my labours, "not unfrequently" I am assailed by anonymous threats, and often exaggerated statements of the conduct of those whom it is my particular duty to watch over, in the performance of which I will yield to no man, in my desire to steer the middle sphere, so as to please what is called the public, "as I shall as applying to this circumstance hereafter describe." "With Argus eyes I closely watch each motion," and so far as practice and experience will assist me, will venture to say I am not easily to be deceived in my calculation as to numbers. But finding that a paragraph has passed through several of the daily journals, and copied in the John Bull of this day, noticing a circumstance connected with the feeling of that public, which the first inform ant must have, and by the means of some extraordinary magnifying power, transmitted it, and certainly is one of the most gross exaggerations that could be fabricated, "as regarding an as-semblage of persons on Thursday last round the house of Peers," as well as alluding to the consequences which arose from that "supposed multitudo," it is almost too ludicrous to observe upon after I have taken the pains, "as it was my especial duty," to satisfy, as I trust I have, thou who were more immediately concerned, both executively and individually, "as regarding that illustrious personage, in that occurrence; and the contempt it deserves at my hands will, I am sure, if the editor knows him, give me fair play, by consigning him to the fate which he so justly deserved, "of putting him to nurse again." For t is a little singular that in this immense crowd of 700 or 800 ruffians, I did (as I sometimes do) recollect one of more genteel appearance than the rest, whom my ordinary salutation of "Pray, Sir, move on" (which I rarely fail to administer three times to persons of apparent distinction, "before I move them," like the author, as I suspect, of this invention, and who, as I suppose, was a great man in a small compas (say about four feet three inches,) but which dinonition was repelled most indignantly, and with a threat which I have no doubt he has recourse to in this instance, as an expedient to fulfil his assertion; for, Sir, I am free to tell you, on an investigation of this mighty affair, (being in a condition to have the whole of this formidable phalanx counted as it were one by one, and certified to the proper quarter in my justification,) in answer to the representation of Friday last, and by which I proved the amount to be 43 boys, and not exceeding 20 adults, among the former of whom I suspect this Gulliver had retreated for his declaration, was "that he had business but would not say who with;" that he was not in my way. which in some measure was a truism," and should hear of it from whence I little expected; and little as this assertion is altogether to my mind, and so little consequence do I attach to

The Washington papers of yesterday ave copious extracts of the arguments of Mr. Swann and Mr. Ker, who were heard on Monday in support of the indictments against Dr. WATKINS.

On the question of jurisdiction, besides asserting the criminal common law jurisdiction of the Federal Courts it was said that Congress had adopted the laws of Mary-LAND for the government of the District of COLUMBIA; that the common law was part of the law of MARYL ; ND; and that this common law jurisdiction has been constantly exercised by the court of the District.

With respect to the indictments, it was contended that the facts, if proved as stated. constituted an offence very different from that of a mere defaulter: the accused not having been entrusted with the public money, but having obtained it by fraud. The indictment, it was said, could be supported on two distinct grounds; first, that the of fence described is indictable at common aw, as a fraud on the public, and, secondy, that the making of false writings is set

Mn. Epiton:—A writer in the Daily Adverer, of this morning, who signs himself " A Trader," complains that, when walking through the streets, for the purpose of ridding himself of ennni, and on finding himself in a hotel, he obperved men who, but a short time before, would have scorned to enter a tayern, assembled there to treat the merchants from the country. He found there a respectable man who had, for me time, been driven from making his purchases in Philadelphia by the disgusting imporfamilies of merchants and their clerks.

Now, Sir, I admit that the industribus me among wholesale dry goods merchants and their clerks are in the habit of occasionally calling their customers when they arrive in town, and I see nothing wrong in it; but that it is cusmary to treat them with drink, or that the sentry merchants are a class of men that suffer semestres to be treated in the manner that Mr. culson's correspondent describes, I deny.

COAL.

This is an article which, within a few years past, has excited much attention, and is becoming the most important item in domestic expenses. The supplies of anthracite coal from the Schuylkill, Lehigh and Lackawaxen beds, have contributed much to lessen the price of fuel; and, in most cases, coal fires are preferred to wood. We are informed that there has recently been discovered a bed of coal within a mile of the Delaware and Hudson Canal, near the northern boundary of the county of Sullivan. From the specimens exhibited and description of location, it is highly probable it will prove equal in quality and quantity to any yet discovered. It is owned by the Messrs. The following is a copy of the sentence passed on Shadrack Jacobs, at Charleston, on the 11th instant. He was convicted of having murdered Andrew Feaster, in the year 1808, and appealed to the Court of Appeals, who refused to allow a new trial. The sentence was pronounced by Judge Colcock.

Shadrack Jacobs, you have heard the opinior of this Court pronounced, and perceive that your motion for a new trial cannot be granted You say, you have nothing to urge why the sentence of the law should not be pronounced It devolves on me to discharge that most painful

Your offence is the highest in the catalogue of erimes, and one which, by the common consent of mankind, is punished with death.

Twenty years have clapsed since the perpe tration of the fatal deed, and judging from my knowledge of the human character, I cannot doubt that you have suffered more in that period than yet remains to be endured while you are

The stings of a guilty and reproving con science, added to the constant apprehensions of detection and punishment, must have rendered your existence miserable indeed. But the end i now come.

When I behold you bending under the weight of years and guilt, I cannot discharge the duties of a judge, without mingling the sympathies of the man, and without recommending to you to apply to that all-sufficient fountain of mercy, for that assistance which you can no longer expect from things of time. The scoffings of individuals may shake the faith of weak men, but when the hour arrives which separates us from all that we have been fondly or vainly clinging to here, there is no hope that can impart such re lief, (nay such delight, if it be strong,) as the hope of salvation through the merciful interces-sion of a Redeemer. The allurements of this world, and the vanity of our nature, may sustain us while in the enjoyment of our health and faculties; but it is at this most momentous period that we feel and appreciate our worthlessness and consequently seek some better foundation than we have laid, on which to build a hope .-Believing, as I do, in these important truths, I earnestly recommend to you to employ your few remaining days in supplicating the mercy of

The sentence is, that you be taken hence to the jail from whence you came, thence to the jail of the district in which your offence has been committed; that from thence you be taken, on the 19th day of June next, to the place of execution, and there between the hours of 11 o'clock in the morning, and 5 in the evening, you be hung by the neck until your body be your offended God

And may the Lord have mercy on your soul.

A most daring burglary was committed about o'clock on the morning of Monday, 18th inst. in a dwelling occupied by two widow ladies, in the immediate vicinity of the Circular Church, on meeting-street. It appear that the villain, (who is believed to have been a white man) after attempting, in vain, to force his way into the lower part of the house, ascended the roof of the Piazza, and pulling open the blinds of one of the bed-chamber windows, deliberately made his way into the room-a lady who was at the time in bed with two young children, nearly overcome with fright, called loudly for assistance on which the villian passed into the passage leading to another bed-room, in which an elderly lady lodged; but who, hearing the screams of her daughter, hastened to fasten her door. The lady first named, with much presence of mind, immediately fastened her door also on the inside, and opening a front window called loudly for assistance. This alarmed the robber, who made the best of his way down stairs, and opening one of the front room windows leaped into the street, and escaped before any one came to the assistance of the ladies. But the alarm give en prevented the bold intruder from realizing his object which, was undoubtedly plunder .-Charleston Courier.

LOCOMOTIVE STEAM ENGINE. A New-York morning paper of Wednesday states-A locomotive engine imported by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, and intended to operate on their rail road, was put in motion yesterday. His Excellency the Governor of the state, several Judges of the Courts, the gentlemen of the D. & H. C. Co. and a number of others were present, and all expressed themselves well pleased with the operation of the machine. The boiler is mounted on four wheels, and on either side of it is an engine, the pistons of which work on rods extending to one pair of the wheels, and thus by a crank motion the whole is made to move. This machine is estimated to be nine horse power, though the force of steam let out may be greater or less, accord-ing to circumstances. The fire was built of the Lackwaren Coal, which appeared to answer the purpose perfectly well. The Company have another engine, upon which an experiment will be made this afternoon, at 5 o'clock, at the foot of Beach street. Extract from a letter, dated

"GIBRALTAR, 17th MARCH, 1829. Since our last Circular of 1st January, the free communication with Spain has been opened, and vessels proceeding hence are admitted without any quarantine, -which information may be in teresting.

The subjoined Prices Current conveys a tolerably correct representation of the state of our market, and leaves us little to add. There have been some heavy sales of dry hides at about $16,50 per cwt., at which we are about closing for a parcel, now landing, ex-American brig George, from Buenos Ayres. During the last month, there have been only three arrivals from the United States.

We have secured the Pamela a full carge, freight, from Malaga, at $10 per ton, to New York; and other freights are offering on the coast, for pthe River Plate and the Brazils, at about $8 per pipe, and 10 per cent."

From the Illinois Gazette of May 9. Another Steamboat Disaster .- We learn that the Steamboats Lady Washington and Caledonia ran foul of each other a few nights since, near the town of Leavensworth, a short distance this side of Louisville. The Lady Washington was descending and the Caledonia ascending the river, and both running near to the shore, they did not discover each other until the Lady Washington was reduced to the alternative of running aground or risking the catastrophe that afterwards so unhappily befel her, by turning to the opposite side of the river; the latter she adopted; when the Caledonia, under headway too strong to be checked, run into her side The Lady Washington, it seems, would have im-mediately sunk but for the magnanimous and truly praiseworthy conduct of the captain of the edonia-she was lashed to the Caledonia, and by means of hawsers attached to her, was kept affoat; such of her cargo as could be stowed away was taken on board the Caledonia, and in this condition she was towed up to New

Albany. The damage sustained is not known. We take pleasure in contrasting the conduct of the commander of the Caledonia with that of the Diana under similar circumstances. It wil be remembered that the latter ran foul of the Gen. Carrol, and injured her so that she sunk immediately; and after the occurrence of the accident, the Diana proceeded on her way, with out attempting or offering any assistance whatever to those whose distresses she had produ

The editors of the Baltimore Chronicle have seen a letter, dated April 17, 1829, from an intelligent American in Mexico, stating that the mines of Zdcatecas lately made 48 bars of silver in one week. The weekly expense is $13,000, and the clear weekly profit, for the last nine months, at a low estimate, $20,090.
